Brown, wearing the laurels won in successive battles against Yale and Harvard, will face the maroon-clad host of Colgate at Providence, the game beginning at 1:30 o'clock in the afternoon Pennsylvania and Cornell, those time-honored rivals, will come to grips on Franklin Field, and the fur is certain to fly. The unbeaten team of Pittsburgh University will oppose Penn State on Forbes Field, in Pittsburgh. These are the games which stand out most prominently on the programme. Local enthusiasts will not suffer, for Rutgers and Washington and Jefferson will meet on the constant of the first half by a score of 10 to 7, thanks to the might of Howard Berry, who has been called the "Pennsylvania Limited."

The natural conclusion that one would draw from the scores of those two games is: Cornell has the more powerful attack, but a more vulnerable to the same opposition. eleven that Larry Bankhart has built up for Colgate, she will have clear title to the Eastern championship. If, on the other hand, Colgate should triumph, Pittsburgh will have the best claim, providing Warner's men defeat Penn State.

All indications point to victory for Brown. The Providence team showed the temper of its mettle in riding rough shod over Yale, and then following through with a victory over Hartsard, however, that there is little difference of its lustre. We have the word of a man who won his letter at Harvard, however, that there is little difference between team A, which faced Yale yes terday, and team B, which struck its colors to the fierce assaults of the dusky Fritz Pollard and his cohorts.

The fame of Fritz Pollard has been sung in the highest key, and justly so.
